A THOUGHT ON VALENTINE'S DAY

Love is eternal. It has no beginning and no end. Of course, there is no need to explain 'love' to today's generation. Everyone is familiar with this concept. It is amazing how people these days celebrate Valentine's Day—a day to celebrate Romantic Love. If you go back in history, traces of Valentine's Day to be celebrated as Lovers' Day are very rare. Even in Europe this is a creation of 19th century. This has only gained momentum with literary creations and movies. However this romantic love now has been changed to 'love for all'. I was surprised this morning when the Garbage man of BMC wished me, "Happy Valentine's Day didi"(usually he used to wish me with a 'namaskar'). I didn't know how to react. But one thing is obvious, this Valentine's Day has gone deeper into the society and affected all as the 'cell phones'. Whether we accept it or denounce-it is there. Exhibition of a tender feeling like 'love' sounds hopeless. But to show that we are ultramodern we do exhibit it. My question here is not the so called western tradition but its wrong execution. Next time you wish your colleagues, friends, seniors/Juniors a 'Happy Valentine's Day' just give a second thought to it. It is really great to be in love but in the right perspective. I believe EVERY DAY is a Lovers' Day for me if I am in love. The obvious factor is that I can't be in love with 'EVERYONE'.
